How to Freshen Up an Outdated Office Space

A large portion of our lives is spent in our offices. When optimized, they create a space that fuels our energy and creativity. But when outdated, they can hold us back and leave us feeling uninspired.

Don't allow an outdated office to hold you back.
Modernize and update with these four tips.

Make a Statement

Create a visual impact with canvas artwork. One of the first things that a company owner will be judged on is the appearance of their place of business. This is simply due to the fact that, when walking into your office for the first time, a prospective customer can't help but notice what's on your walls. You want to make sure that the prints you choose are of the highest quality.

Light it Up

What's more depressing than working in a dark office? Update wall fixtures and your overhead lighting. Also, try floor lamps for corners that are just not getting hit with enough light.

Revamp the Furniture

Old and squeaky office chairs can be an eyesore and a literal pain. New furniture can bring an aged office into the modern world. Start with the chairs and desks as these get used the most.

Add Accent Pieces

Survey your space to find the most visually obvious piece of furniture and either refurbish it or replace it with a different accent piece.
